Blowing glass for science

Scientific Glassblowing

It looks like just another warehouse, but inside glass rods and tubes are magically turned into laser beam lamps and other medical and scientific apparatus.

Actually, owner Kurt Fasold will tell you it's not magic at all. He and his three employees heat the solid glass to 1,450 degrees Fahrenheit and quartz to 4,500 F before they shape the material into another form.

They use rods to guide the melted glass or quartz. To create the hollow spaces they need in their flasks and flashlamps they hold a tube in their mouths and literally blow up the glass.

The Upland company, Space Glass Inc., provides mostly strobe lights and laser pumps for aircraft companies, research laboratories and universities throughout the United States. Some of the orders come from as far away as Israel and Japan, Fasold said.

There is no mass production here, all items are painstakingly made by hand to the customer's specification. Often a requested product may be brand new to the company, Fasold said, and it is made from a drawing and outlined measurements.

Patience is a necessity in the scientific glassblowing business, Fasold said, noting that he may work up to five hours on an individual item. Although some of the products are easy enough to handle at more than a foot long, others — like the tiny, detailed microbalances made from quartz — are less than inch long.

Because of the precision needed, skill is also a must, and Fasold said it requires a kind of quality hard to find these days.

He explained that it takes four years to learn the skill in an apprenticeship and American young people are just not willing to wait that long to make a decent living. But, on the other hand, he cannot afford to pay an apprentice full salary because of the time it takes to teach them, and because of all the expensive mistakes they make.

"It's very expensive to train somebody, and there's not even a guarantee after you spend $30,000 to $40,000 (on them) that you'll be able to use them," he said.

As a result, most of the people in the scientific glassblowing business tend to be in their 40s or older, he said.

The business owner has been blowing glass for 35 years. He was trained as an apprentice in France, after he learned rudimentary skills in his native East Germany. Before World War II most of the world's glass was made in Germany, he said.

Fasold came to the United States when he read advertisements in German newspapers looking for people with skills in glassblowing.

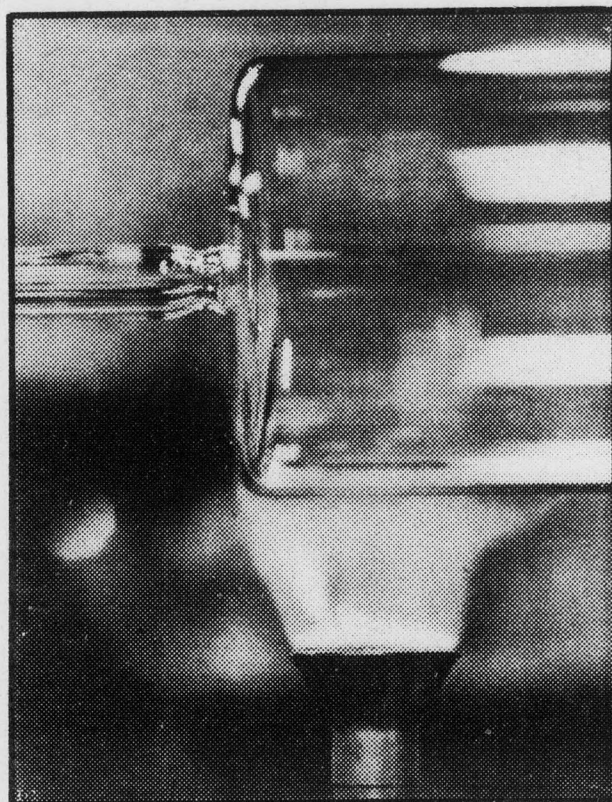

The U.S. government paid for the young man's passage to the country and he ended up with a contract blowing glass for the Navy at an atomic reactor plant in Canoga Park, he said.

Later, he arranged for his father to come to the United States and work for him when he opened his own firm. The 80-year-old Rudolf Fasold still commutes from his Westminster home twice a week to Upland to work for his son.

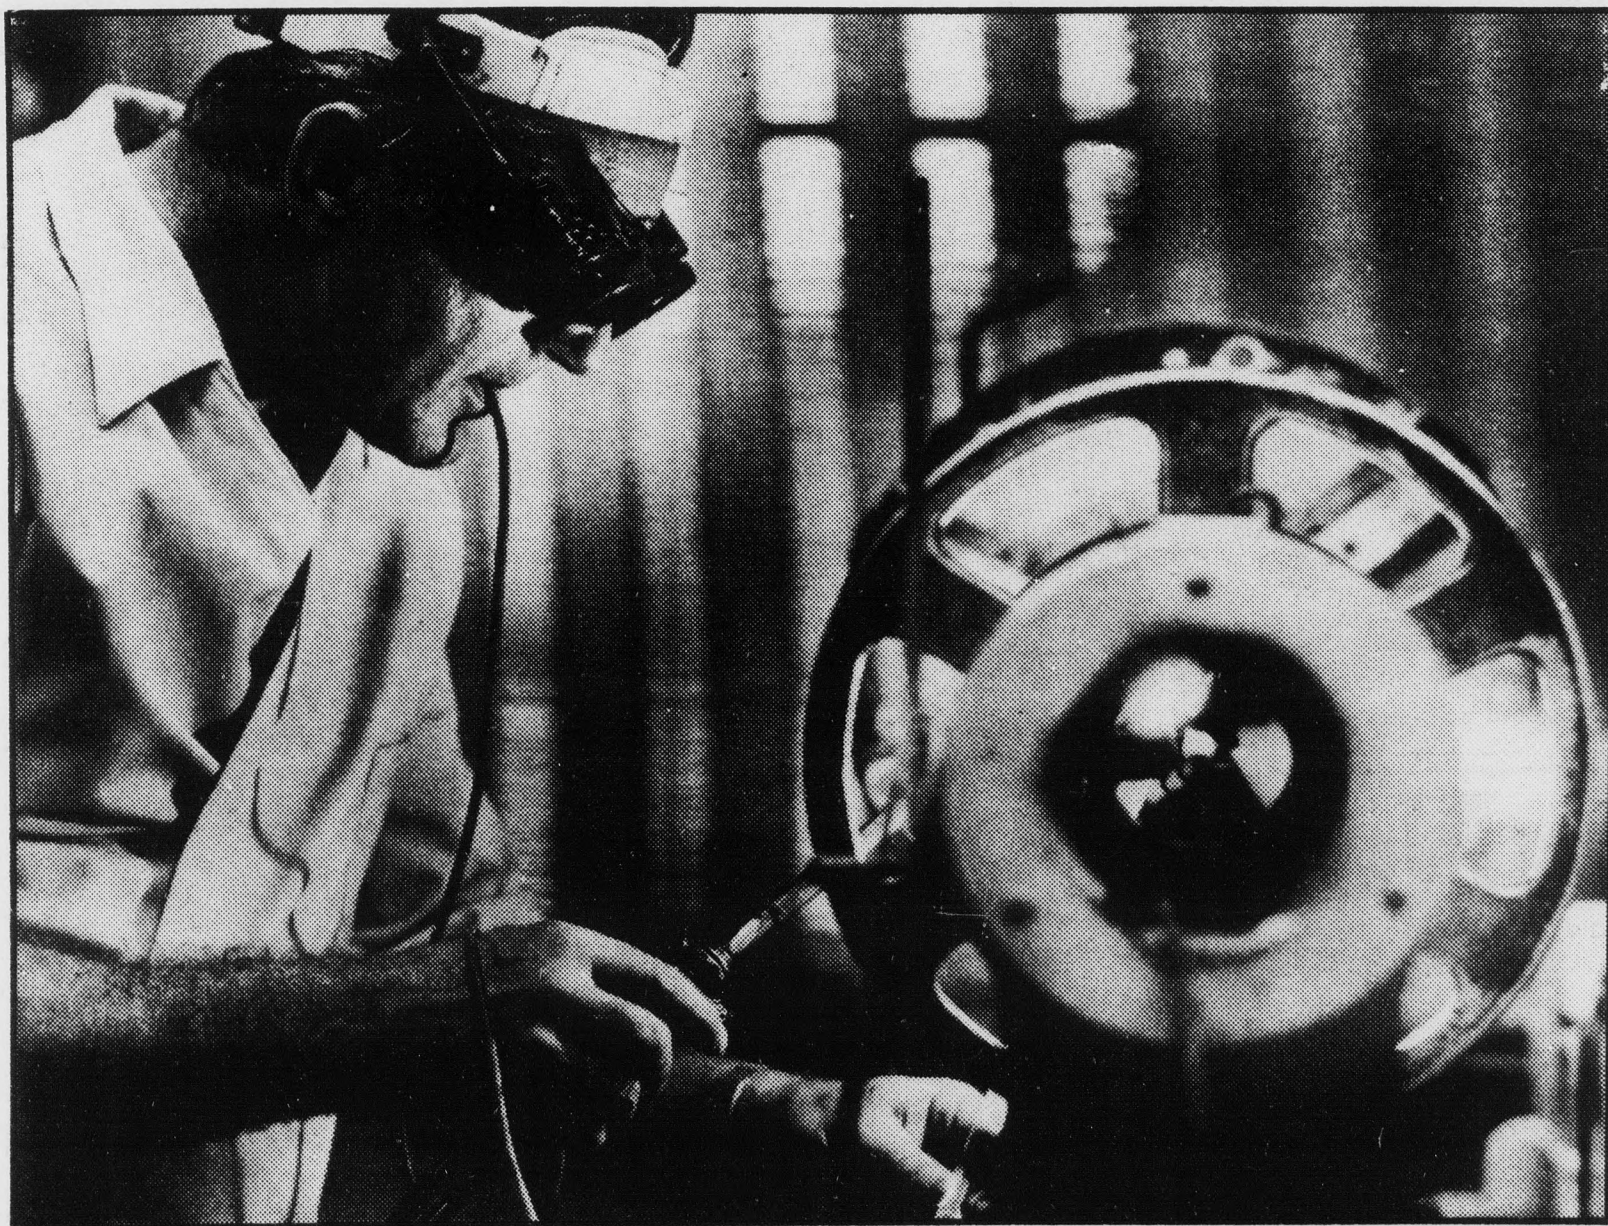

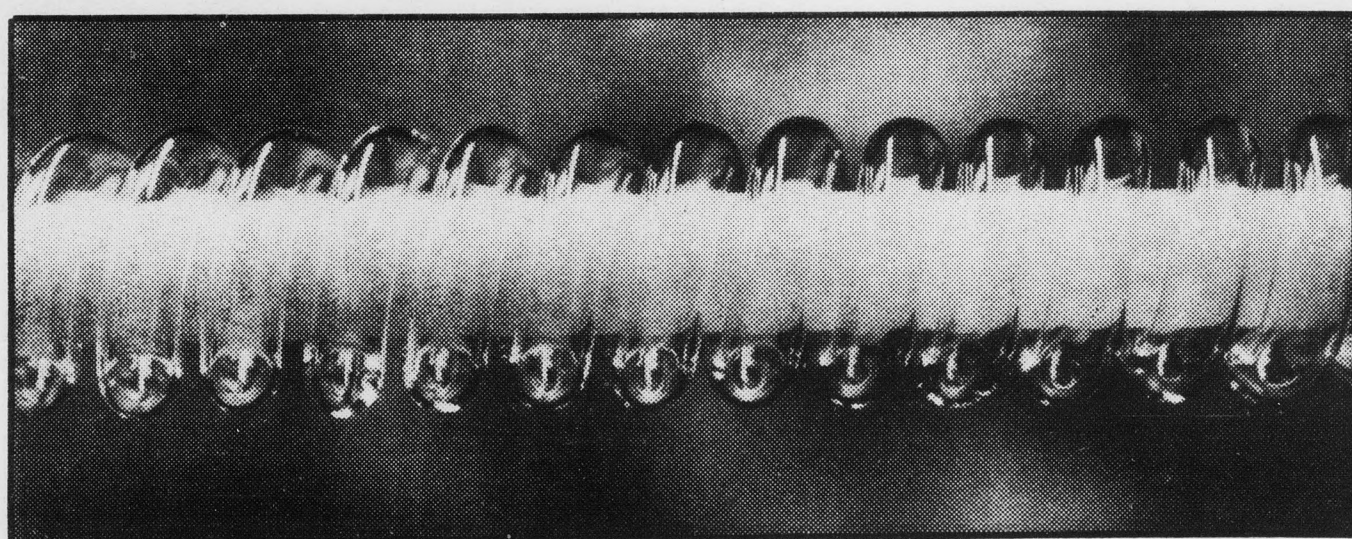

It is all in the family at Space Glass. Besides his father, Fasold employs his daughter as a blower and his wife as receptionist and bookkeeper. The only non-relative employed there is Minnie Grasso, who has been with the company for 15 years.

"We've been adopting her," Fasold joked.

"After 10 years, you're family," she agreed. □

R.C. youth likes television acting

By Suzanne Sproul

Brandon Bluhm loves his work.

The Rancho Cucamonga youngster particularly likes his television co-stars, fluffy balls of fun called Popples.

"I like Popples because they change into balls. I bring them to all my auditions because they're real furry and are fun animals," young Brandon said about one of his co-stars.

The 7-year-old Rancho Cucamonga boy was the star of the "Popple Special," which aired last week on KTTV/Channel 11.

The special was the brainchild of actress-turned-producer Shelley Duvall. The show promoted the Mattel Co.'s newest cuddly toy — the Popples.

And smack-dab in the middle of numerous little balls of fluff during the one-hour production was Brandon, who was making his acting debut.

Popples resemble the familiar puppets, the Muppets. Mattel has big plans for the little creatures. They'll star in a scheduled Saturday morning cartoon this fall.

In the special, Brandon played a young boy whose sister finds the mysterious Popples living in a box in the family's attic.

The children's parents cleaned the attic one day and accidentally took the Popples' box to a thrift shop. The children then searched for and found them.

And, of course, the parents allowed the Popples to live with the family.

"The Popple special was his first job. It was filmed in October and Brandon's been working ever since," said Dee Anne Bluhm, Brandon's mother.

Since the special, the Dona Merced School student has appeared in several television commercials; an episode of "The Twilight Zone;" and a pilot show for a possible fall series, "Destination America."

Brandon is the star of the "Destination America" pilot.

Mrs. Bluhm and Brandon travel to Los Angeles almost every weekday after school for auditions.

Although Brandon's new career keeps everyone in the family hopping, Mrs. Bluhm said she will continue the fast-paced life as long as her son enjoys his work.

"He's always been an outgoing boy. People used to tell us we should channel his energies somewhere so my husband and I enrolled him in a television acting workshop in Burbank," she said.

"When the class was over several people wanted to sign him up and his career got started. He's been working ever since."

Now Brandon has a manager and agent.

"He knows if he continues with acting there isn't going to be any Little League for him, but he played soccer when he was in kindergarten and plays the piano, so he's had a pretty normal life up until now," she said.

He may be a star on the set, but at home Brandon is expected to do his chores, his mother said.

The Bluhms have two other sons, Dustin and Brady, but neither seem interested in following in Brandon's footsteps.

PVCCA seeking members

By Suzanne Sproul

Pomona Valley Community Concert Association members are conducting their 1986 membership drive.

The association's season begins in November.

"In order to bring outstanding concerts to the area at reasonable prices, you have to book many of the performances at least a year in advance," said Merrill Dastrup, association president.

"We need to know how many memberships we have in order to book the concerts."

An adult membership for four concerts costs $20. Families can purchase a membership for $50 and the cost for students is $10.

Membership dues pay for the concerts, and only members can obtain tickets. There are no extra charges.

The concerts will be presented in Ontario's historic Gardiner W. Spring Auditorium.

Performers and concert dates for the 1986-87 season are: Shakespeare at the Opera, Nov. 4, 8 p.m.; violinist Robert McDuffie, Jan. 13, 8 p.m.; baritone Theodore Baerg, Feb. 22, 3 p.m.; and pianists Steven and Nadya Gordon, April 6, 1987, 8 p.m.

"We try and have concerts that will appeal to everyone," Dastrup said.

Dastrup has been involved with the association on and off since 1945. He has been very active the past four years, particularly now as president.

"I've always enjoyed music. I took some piano lessons and have sung in some choirs, but Merrill Dastrup, Pomona Valley Community Concert Association president, says the group offers good music at affordable prices.

music mainly has been a hobby for me," he said. "I love it. It's part of my life."

The association also wants to promote culture in the West Valley.

Although most of the music is classical, Dastrup said many are surprised to discover how many more popular pieces of music are from the classics.

"I remember when I was in the third or fourth grade. One of my teachers taught a music appreciation class. I developed a love of good music then," he said.

Supported in part by The Arts Foundation of San Bernardino County, the Pomona Valley Community Concert Association has a membership of 700.

Association supporters hope to build the membership to 1,000.

The association is conducting its membership campaign. The concert season begins in November.

"If the membership was larger, we would be able to book larger groups for the concerts such as chamber orchestras," the president said.

The annual concerts have had to compete with movies and television. And in addition to the competition, Dastrup said not too many people know about the association.

"We, as an association, just would like to acquaint the public with the enjoyable evenings it has to offer. There's just something in a live performance that can't be captured on a video tape or television," he said.

For membership information, write the Pomona Valley Community Concert Association, P.O. Box 1896, Ontario 91762.

Chaffey College students do well in CSU system

By Marianne Aiken

Chaffey College students transferring into the California State University (CSU) system do better academically than those entering fresh out of high school, according to a CSU study.

The annual study showed Chaffey College students who transferred to one of the CSU campuses during the 1984-85 academic year achieved a grade point average (GPA) 6 percent higher than the GPA of all other community college transfers and 7 percent higher than those who entered CSU as freshmen.

"We've always thought our instructional program was excellent and compared well to university courses. This bears it out and we're very proud of that," said Mike Alexander, vice president of instruction at Chaffey College.

The report issued Feb. 24 by William E. Vandament, provost and vice chancellor, academic affairs for CSU, tracked the work of 275 Chaffey College students entering CSU for the first time.

Their aggregate GPA was 2.85, while the aggregate GPA for all other community college first-time transfer students was 2.67, or 6 percent lower than the Chaffey College group's aggregate GPA.

Students who entered the CSU system as freshmen had a 2.64 GPA at the end of the year, or 7 percent lower than Chaffey College transfer students.

"Bear in mind that people who start their careers at CSU are a priori in the upper third of high school graduates," Alexander said. "The people who start their careers at Chaffey aren't even required to graduate from high school."

Alexander said there's been an emphasis during the last couple of years to improve the information flow from between the different college systems in the state.

R.C. woman relieved over action on problems

By Marianne Aiken

A Rancho Cucamonga woman who has repeatedly complained about maintenance violations on five commercial properties in her Helms Avenue neighborhood said she is relieved something is being done about the problems.

Sylvia Gardner, of 8234 Helms, said she was happy to hear two citations and a warning had been issued to three of the five property owners this week.

"At least something's being done," she said, when contacted by telephone after last Wednesday night's Rancho Cucamonga City Council meeting.

The five commercial properties carry Hampshire Street or Foothill Boulevard addresses and are located in the neighborhood at the north end of Helms Avenue, south of Foothill, between Hellman Avenue and Archibald Avenue.

John Brewster of Yorba Linda, who two weeks ago denied that he owned the property at the southeast corner of Helms and Hampshire, appeared at the City Council meeting last Wednesday to explain his tardiness in removing weeds, trash and a foot of water from his property.

Gardner's neighbor Jim Green, of 8235 Helms, complained in early February about the trash and stagnant water on the southeast corner of Helms and Hampshire, which led to a city investigation Feb. 6 into problems there and at other adjacent properties.

Gardner told The Daily Report in March that things hadn't improved much since then.

"There's nothing been done about the trash or the water or anything," she said March 6.

Councilman Chuck Buquet requested a status report Wednesday night from the city staff on the code enforcement program in the 9400 block of Hampshire.

Brewster told the council the first violation notice the city mailed him Feb. 11 went to his attorney instead of him.

The weather also held things up, Brewster said.

"It had just stopped raining and it started raining again," he said.

He told the council he still is two weeks to 30 days away from grading the property.

"We'd like to get this doggone thing going," Brewster said. "We don't have any ax to grind."

The city sent Brewster a warning letter Tuesday that a citation will be issued if he does not clean up his property or start construction by April 11.

Frank Workman of La Crescenta and Jacquelyn M. Hughes of Sacramento were issued citations last Tuesday, but citations were not issued to two remaining property owners, Lewis Development Co. of Upland and Charles and Jacqueline M. Hughes of Rancho Cucamonga.

Concentration camp experiences told

By Kimberly Heinrichs

In 1942 the United States rounded up 110,000 of its Japanese-American residents and shipped them off to concentration camps for three years.

These people — mostly U.S. citizens — lost their property, businesses and friends. With no incidences of espionage, the U.S. government placed them behind barbed wire in camps for safekeeping after the Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor during World War II.

Recently five of those people talked about their experiences at a panel discussion at Pitzer College in Claremont. A sixth Japanese-American, who grew up in Hawaii where they were generally left alone, spoke about efforts to seek compensation for those imprisoned.

"Most of the Japanese were sort of quiet, followed orders and such, but as you can imagine there was a sense of outrage in all of us," said Hiroshi Ito, a retired aerospace engineer who spent six months at Santa Anita racetrack before being sent on to a camp in Colorado.

Ito said that occasionally outrage broke through to the surface. He was a member of the newspaper staff at the racetrack, which served as an "assembly center" for families until they were sent on to the 10 permanent "relocation" camps sprinkled throughout the West and Arkansas.

The Japanese-Americans, who were allowed to bring only what they could carry, were given horse stalls for homes at the racetrack, he said.

Ito said that once at Santa Anita a riot broke out after U.S.

"Most of the Japanese were sort of quiet, followed orders and such, but as you can imagine there was a sense of outrage in all of us."

— Hiroshi Ito

soldiers rummaged through their possessions, confiscating all metal objects, even spoons and knitting needles. He said that the public relations manager hired by the government kept the incident from the press.

But such outbreaks of violent expression were rare. Despite the fact that the Japanese-Americans were singled out — no German- or Italian-Americans spent time in concentration camps — they have demonstrated a general reserve in relation to their imprisonment.

That reserve was mirrored in the panel discussion. Of the five former camp residents, only Ito seemed willing to talk personally about the emotional toll of the imprisonment.

Ito, who was 17 at the time, had an older sister who had a weak heart from a childhood illness. He said the physical exertion of camp life combined with the psychological strain of being uprooted from her home contributed to her death at the camp.

"I suspect that if she hadn't been exposed to that pressure she would have survived," he said. "I'm sure many others lost their lives or had them shortened."

Panelist Frank Chuman, an attorney who has written a history of Japanese-Americans called "The Bamboo People," explained that quietly overcoming the shock and helplessness of their situation was part of the Japanese heritage.

"In going through this tremendous upheaval in our lives, whatever age we were, I think a lot of us took comfort in the tradition of the bamboo," said Chuman, who spent time in Manzanar, a camp in the Central California desert.

He explained that the bamboo plant native to Japan is said to have a strong steel core.

"There is a famous saying in Japan that the bamboo will bend, but it will never break," Chuman said.

The panelists were Nisei, second generation Japanese-Americans born in this country. While their parents bent by passively obeying their country's orders to leave their homes, the Nisei men had to bend even further by enlisting in the military.

Both Ito and panelist Kanshi Yamashita defended the very nation that imprisoned them and their families.

"It really was quite a sight to see the servicemen in uniform going to these relocation camps on leave," Ito said.

More than 40 years after the camps broke up and the people were sent on their way, many have not been compensated, said panelist Joyce Okinaka. The Los Angeles representative of the National Council for Japanese American Redress, Okinaka is part of a group that filed a class action lawsuit against the U.S. government in 1982.

Although 21 of the 22 causes of action against the government have been dropped by the courts, Okinaka reported that the case was granted an appeal in Washington, D.C. If her group wins its case, Japanese-Americans imprisoned in the camps would be compensated only for loss of their possessions, Okinaka said. Loss of wages and emotional distress would not be considered, she said.

An attorney for the California Department of Transportation, Okinaka said she became outraged at what had happened when she moved from Hawaii and studied constitutional law at UCLA.

"I'm not against the country, I only want the country to follow its constitution," she said, echoing the sentiments of the other panelists.

Archie Miyatake, whose father was Manzanar photographer and recorded much of camp life on film, and Sue Kunitomi Embrey, chairwoman of the Manzanar Committee and the Manzanar Pilgrimage, also were panelists.

"H.O.T. TIPS" (HOUSE OF TOOLS)

Cut a hollow rubber ball into two pieces, one smaller than the other (for two different sizes). Into these hollow pieces, place your steel wool and use instead of final sandpaper, for finishing your woodworking projects. The rubber ball will keep the steel wool together and also keep it from sticking your fingers.

Narrow strips of sandpaper used to sand turnings or curved objects tend to tear, cutting less efficiently the shorter they get, until they are so many useless pieces of expensive paper.

To make them last longer, back them with fiberglass strapping tape; they'll be virtually untearable.

Octagonal pipe-clamp cushions of 3/4" ply wool with a hole in the center for the pipe eliminates the need for awkward gluing blocks. The octagonal shape keeps the cushions from rolling.

Park credit proposal dead in the water

By Marianne Aiken

A proposal to remove the three-acre minimum requirement for private open space park credit in Rancho Cucamonga is dead in the water.

The City Council refused to eliminate the requirement last Wednesday, and, in tabling the proposal, essentially put the controversial issue on the back burner indefinitely.

Under the current park dedication requirements in the city's general plan, developers are required to provide three acres of finished public park land for every 1,000 residents in their projects.

But developers can receive a 50 percent credit for their public park land obligation by providing certain amenities inside their developments, as long as they put those amenities on a minimum of three acres of private open space.

The removal of that three-acre minimum was recommended by the Park Development Commission (PDC), as part of a regular review of park ordinances, said PDC Vice Chairman Pete Patassi.

Councilman Chuck Buquet said he had "ambivalent feelings" about the ordinance.

"This item is something that came up previously and was not approved by the council," Buquet said. "While I support making park credits available, it's going to take time on my part to study how this is going to affect our park plans and future development."

Councilman Dick Dahl proposed tabling the ordinance rather than continuing it to a future meeting.

"I'm obviously opposed to the ordinance as written," Dahl said.

If the ordinance had been in place last year, it would have cost the Park Development Fund $170,000, or roughly 15 percent of the annual revenue to the fund, according to a report by Holley.

Patassi said recommending the removal of the three-acre minimum requirement was not done as a favor to developers.

"In considering this, it wasn't a problem where the developers were saying this is too tough and we can't get credit," Patassi said. "We felt we should look at it as we do with all ordinances, and fine-tune it."

The political hot potato was carried over from the Feb. 19 meeting and the Dec. 18, 1985, meeting before it was tabled last Wednesday.

According to the minutes of the Dec. 18, 1985, meeting, Community Development Director Bill Holley told the council that removing the three-acre restriction was a "philosophical issue."

"Some did not feel this to be economically fair to the small developer as compared to the medium and large developer," Holley said.

Holley described the amended ordinance last Wednesday as something that "stringently tightens the standards of what can be submitted," yet "retains flexibility in the eyes of the PDC."

The proposed amendments would have required amenities such as children's play areas, picnic areas, game courts, swimming pools, and recreation buildings in private park space to be "equal in quality and design to public park improvement standards where applicable."

"By tightening the standards, the creativity is not lost," Holley said.

San Dimas aquatic park expects to be insured, opened on time

As improvements at Raging Waters Aquatic Park near completion, officials at the San Dimas attraction remain confident they will be insured by May 10.

Los Angeles County, which leases the Bonelli Park site to Raging Waters, has required the theme park obtain $1 million in liability insurance.

"It's progressing well," said Steve Adams, Raging Waters' director of marketing. "We'll have no problem. We'll have insurance before we open."

He reported negotiations with insurance carriers have been continuing for several months.

Raging Waters will open for the summer on May 24, but private events and some public opening celebrations will begin taking place May 10.

In the park's wave pool, workers are laying a new surface.

"What they're doing is basically the same as what you do in the bottom of a back yard pool," said Adams. The old dirt bottom is being replaced by gunite, a kind of plaster.

Adams said the new surface will improve wave form and increase wave size, but "increased visibility is certainly a benefit."

An 8-year-old Pomona girl drowned in the pool last summer. Her father attributed her death to the cloudiness of the water. He stated that if waders and swimmers had not kicked up the dirt bottom, his daughter would have been found sooner.

Work on the new bottom began two months ago. The old bottom, along with drainage equipment, was dug up before laying the gunite began.

"Since we've opened the park in 1983, we've added over $2.5 million in improvements," said Adams.

Chef particular about menus; loves to cook

By Suzanne Sproul

Ange Lamonica is very particular about his menus.

He's so picky that he's willing to battle freeway traffic once a week when he travels to Newport Beach to garner a good supply of French bread for La Cheminee restaurant in Ontario.

But Lamonica, an award-winning graduate of the Cordon Bleu cooking school in France, will settle for nothing less than the best. He takes his job as executive chef seriously.

"You don't become a chef just because you have to work," Lamonica said with a thick accent from his native France. "You become a chef because you love to cook. That is my belief."

During his six years at La Cheminee, Lamonica has worked long, hard days to prepare the kind of food he loves. Very few, roughly 1 or 2 percent, of the restaurant patrons ever send back a dish that comes from Lamonica's kitchen.

Most who do simply didn't know what they were ordering and were disappointed. But if a person does have a complaint, Lamonica will personally walk into the dining room and apologize.

"Chefs are well paid, but they do earn it," he said with a slight nod of his head. "I work for the customers."

Lamonica comes from a family of 12 children. When he was 14 years old, his father told him he needed to get a job, so he started working in the restaurant business as a dishwasher.

But Lamonica's father still encouraged him to go to school, particularly since the French government helps support students who continue their education after age 18.

Lamonica worked and went to school, and then enrolled in cooking school. He later attended and graduated from the Cordon Bleu school.

He owned a restaurant in France and worked in that country and South America. During a vacation to the United States one year he met Ontario City Attorney Sam Crowe and Upland attorney Hal Bailin.

Lamonica, Crowe and Bailin became friends and Lamonica always said if Crowe ever owned a restaurant he would come to America and work for him.

Crowe and other partners (The principal owner of the restaurant is Gil Brotti.) bought the La Cheminee and Lamonica and his family moved to the West Valley.

The wall of Lamonica's office is covered with various culinary awards, but the one he is particularly proud of is his participation in Queen Elizabeth's Silver Jubilee dinner in 1977.

Among 80 world-renowned chefs, Lamonica represented the United States when he helped another chef prepare a fish soup for the queen.

Although many consider the kitchen a woman's place, most of the internationally known chefs are men.

"I think most women are very good cooks, but they are good cooks when they cook for small groups. Men are better cooks when they cook for large groups, I think," Lamonica said.

In addition to doing some of the cooking at the restaurant, the executive chef also oversees 10 cooks, does all the food ordering and menu planning.

Lamonica's next major event at the restaurant is a "distinction dinner," seven-course meal May

His menu includes a shellfish consomme; fresh goose liver; sweetbreads; cognac with champagne (to give the chef a rest, Lamonica joked); his own creation of "pheasant a la La Cheminee;" endive salad; imported French cheese; and

"La Cage Aux Folles," a small box of chocolate filled with fresh seasonal fruit.

Lamonica and his cooks usually prepare lunch and dinner for 200 to 300 people each day.

"I never cook at home unless we have a special guest," he said. "But when I cook, I put my whole heart into it."

Bilingual law finds schools in Catch-22 situation

By Marianne Aiken

Local school districts face a Catch-22 situation.

They have to teach and test students who don't speak English — in their own languages.

It's a state law.

But some of the smaller districts in the West Valley don't get enough money from the state to follow the law.

Bilingual education is a "hot potato issue" in California, because of the state's large immigrant population, said Patty Scruggs, coordinator of instructional services for the Alta Loma School District.

"They exert a certain amount of political force on the legislature," she said.

Twelve different languages are spoken in the Alta Loma district, by 71 students labeled "limited English proficient," but there are not enough in any one grade level to justify the employment of a bilingual teacher.

"It's not that we wouldn't be happy to hire a bilingual teacher, but with 12 languages, which do you choose?" Scruggs said.

Instead of bilingual teachers, the district gets by using four part-time aides. Even with state aid, the district falls about $7,000 short of the funds it needs to follow the letter of the law, Scruggs said.

"It isn't even enough to pay the aides, so we have to take money from the general fund, and that still doesn't allow for extra materials," Scruggs said.

The California Education Code requires that where there are 10 students at a certain grade level who all speak the same language, then a bilingual class must be provided at the grade level.

One-third of the students in the bilingual class must speak English.

All school districts are required to administer a home language survey when a child registers for school. If this test determines that English is not the child's primary language, school districts are required to give basic instruction in the child's native language.

On the Alta Loma School District language survey, for example, students are tested for 18 different languages.

Things are better in some of the larger school districts in the West Valley.

"Our school district is so large, we're able to accommodate it," said Bette Harrison, assistant superintendent of instruction for the Chaffey Joint Union High School District, where 20 different languages are spoken.

The high school district has 1,500 limited-English-proficient students, which represents about 10 percent of the total student population. There are 12 full-time bilingual teachers to teach them, as well as four teacher's aides.

Ontario-Montclair School District educators have a higher percentage of students who need bilingual education, about 16 percent, or 2,579 students.

Last year, the figure was 17 percent, said Ed Bordenkircher, superintendent for instruction.

But the bilingual needs are met at the cost of some "encroachment" on the general fund, Bordenkircher said.

"I don't think we ever have enough money at any time to have what I think is an adequate program. That same situation is also true of special education and all categorical programs. There is some encroachment on the general fund," he said.

Antonio Rodriguez, director of instructional support for the Chino Unified School District, said the district has been falling short in the last few years in state economic impact aid for bilingual education.

"As costs go up, our revenue decreases," he said. "The governor may say he's funding us at the same level he was last year, but that's a cut, in effect."

Etiwanda Intermediate, Alta Loma schools' students win contest

Students at Etiwanda Intermediate and Alta Loma Elementary schools took prizes in Rancho Cucamonga's fifth annual "Spring Clean Sweep Poster Contest," Rancho Cucamonga Mayor Jeff King announced last week.

Amy Gutierrez, from Etiwanda Intermediate School, took first place in the senior division. In the junior division, Rachel Bickley of Alta Loma Elementary School took top awards.

Kelly Fritz of Etiwanda Intermediate School got a second place prize in the senior division, while Mary Grace Hansson of Alta Loma Elementary School won second place for the junior division.

Third place winners were Francy Perez of Etiwanda Intermediate School in the senior division and Andrea Tillery of Alta Loma Elementary school in the junior division.

Each poster submitted was judged for its artistic style and its attempt to illustrate each student's concern for controlling litter and maintaining a beautiful environment in Rancho Cucamonga, King said.

More than 100 students from Alta Loma, Jasper, and Central elementary schools, Etiwanda Intermediate School, and Rancho Cucamonga Middle School competed in the contest.

Dispose of hazardous wastes at clinics

Rancho Cucamonga and Upland residents will be given a chance to clean their garages of unwanted household chemicals like paint thinners and unused fertilizer this month.

San Bernardino County officials plan one-day clinics in which they will be collecting household chemicals from local residents free of charge.

The collection centers are aimed at preventing chemicals from being poured down drains or placed in garbage cans. The county Board of Supervisors recently approved $25,000 to pay for the program which is aimed at reducing contamination of ground water supplies by such chemicals.

Fourth District Supervisor Gus Skropos and Second District Supervisor Cal McElwain jointly set up the program to serve the West Valley cities they represent.

The supervisors estimate that each year 600,000 gallons of hazardous chemicals are generated by county residences.

"It is assumed that most of these wastes are disposed into the sewers and landfills with the potential to affect groundwater," said a report authored by the two supervisors.

Because it might cost a resident up to $400 to properly dispose of the chemicals, the county this year is going to provide a disposal program in each community free of charge.

"There's a lot of hazardous waste out there that people would like to get rid of but can't because the cost is too expensive," McElwain told the board.

Chemicals used around the house that residents eventually have to dispose of include paint thinners, insecticides, drugs, drain cleaners, glue, fertilizer, chlorine pool-treatments and gasoline, according to Ken Jeske, the division chief for the county's Environmental Health Services office.

Jeske said that household chemicals are accepted free of charge, year-round at the Central Valley Fire District Headquarters in Fontana.

But Jeske said he hopes the "round-up" attracts the attention of residents who normally might not travel to Fontana to dispose of a can of paint or other chemicals.

He said the receiving centers will accept up to 5 gallons or 50 pounds of household chemicals in sealed and marked containers.

The round-up begins April 12 in the city of Ontario, where county workers will set up a receiving center in the parking lot of the county building at 320 W. D St. from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

That same day, a county round-up center also will operate in the city of Rancho Cucamonga from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., in the parking lot of the Exchange Building at the corner of Carnelian Street and Base Line Road.

On April 19, a collection center will be set up for the same hours in the parking lot between Upland City Hall and the fire department building on First Avenue in Upland.

Also on April 19, a collection center will be operated in the parking lot behind the Montclair fire station at 8901 Monte Vista Avenue from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Tax installment deadline is today

The second installment for San Bernardino County property taxes is due now and delinquent if not paid before 5 p.m. today, treasurer-tax collector Joe Bell has advised.

Those mailing their payments must have the envelope postmarked on or before April 10 to avoid a penalty. Mail should be deposited in the nearest post office to ensure a timely postmark.

Payments postmarked after April 10, will be assessed a 10 percent penalty and $10 per parcel. Property taxes unpaid on June 20 will be declared in default and additional penalties will be attached, Bell said.

All new property owners who do not have tax bills should immediately contact the tax collector to determine their tax status. Inquiries should be directed to 383-2165.

The assessor's parcel number or bill number is necessary for proper identification, Bell said.

R.C. may annex land in rock quarry fight

By Marianne Aiken

Rancho Cucamonga may try to annex about 750-800 acres of land north of the city limits in an effort to keep a rock quarry out of an unincorporated area across the street from an Etiwanda neighborhood.

Senior planner Otto Kroutil said last Wednesday the city's planning staff is making it a "high priority" to prepare a report on the possibility of annexing lands controlled by the San Bernardino County Flood Control District for council scrutiny.

Kroutil described the targeted area as a chunk of land north of Highland Avenue between the extension of Rochester and Milliken avenues.

Councilman Dick Dahl said he felt that the county would be receptive toward the annexation effort.

"Generally, you go to the Local Agency Formation Commission (LAFC) first," Dahl said, "but if we have the blessings of the board of supervisors and the county flood control district, it would be very difficult ... to turn us down."

Councilman Chuck Buquet mentioned annexation as a possible method to stop the development of the rock-crushing operation following a public hearing on the project in February.

A City Council resolution of intent to annex the land would be the first step in the annexation process, Kroutil said.

"We'll go back to the council and see if they want to pass a resolution," Kroutil said. "We're putting together a package to submit to the county to get

Foothill Fire District rebuilds fire engine number 3

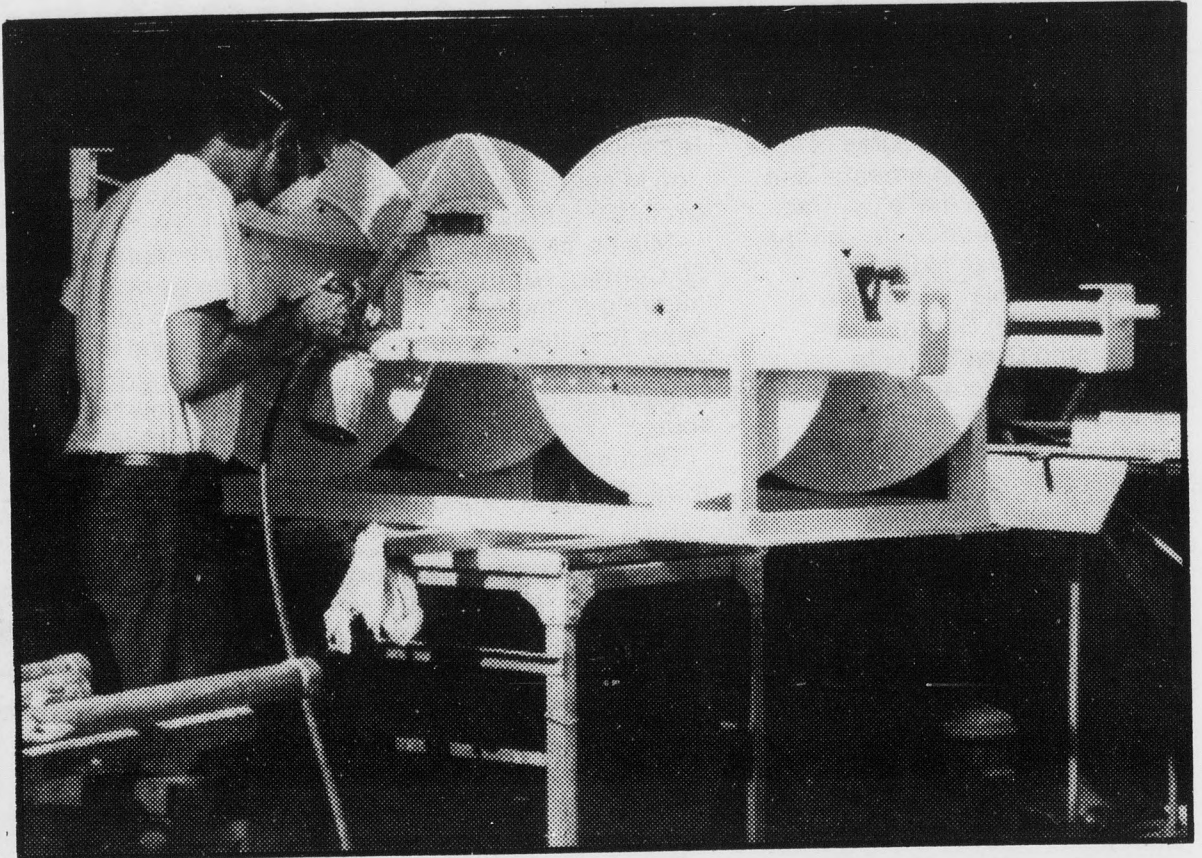

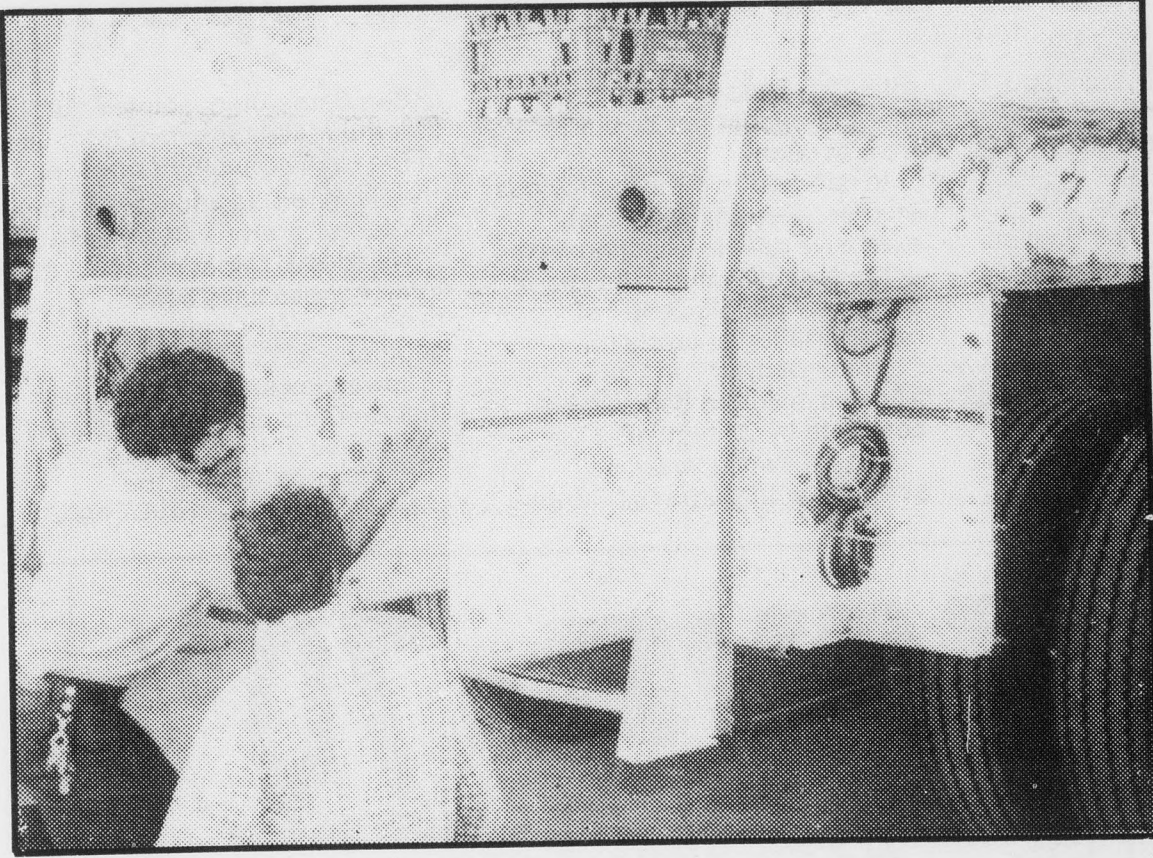

This fire truck looks new, but isn't. Actually, it's a rebuilt 1973 Ward LaFrance model. Foothill Fire District saved more than $100,000 by rebuilding the truck and expects to reap another 10 years of front-line service from the rig.

Story by Andrew Horen

Photos by Alexander Gallardo and Foothill Fire District

What do you get when you cut the body off an old fire truck, set the chassis on Eucalyptus tree stumps and let it sit for more than a year?

If you're the Foothill Fire District in Rancho Cucamonga, you get a new fire truck at a substantial discount — almost $100,000.

Last week, the district put its third refurbished fire truck, a 1973 Ward LaFrance model, back into service.

"Today, it costs between $140,000 and $180,000 to build a pumper like this," explained Sam Dominick, Foothill's maintenance officer. "We've been able to (rebuild) this one for $40,000."

The truck had gone out of service in October 1984, suffering from a bad case of body rust and engine run-down, according to Dominick.

Once work to rebuild the truck began in February 1985, Dominick and a dedicated crew of Foothill firefighters set about replacing almost every feature and function of the machine.

"Karl 'Sparks' Cox rebuilt the electrical," Dominick said, "and our part-time retired mechanic, Warren Luttrull, fabricated a lot of the truck body."

"We dropped the axles and pulled the suspension," Dominick said. "Rust was building up — you could see daylight through parts of the body."

Along the way, Dominick was able to install a few innovative devices and provide firefighters with something approaching luxury.

"We were able to install a 'front-suction' system so we can drive right up to a hydrant," he said. "Plus, we've soundproofed the cabin, and moved the sirens down to the front bumper."

Dominick explained soundproofing is more than just a benefit to those riding in the trucks.

"A lot of the guys retiring from the district were going out with hearing losses," he said. "We hope the soundproofing will cut back on some of that."

Dominick attended to small details, such as moving switches to more convenient — and safer — locations on the truck's body.

He had the truck's booster pump rebuilt so that it could operate in reverse to flush sand and gravel out of the works.

With the rapid property development in the area, Dominick explained, gravel often gets into water lines, and eventually fouls the trucks' pumps.

He even replaced the old cloth hose covers with aluminum, "because debris from burning palm trees was always falling on (the covers) and burning them," Dominick said.

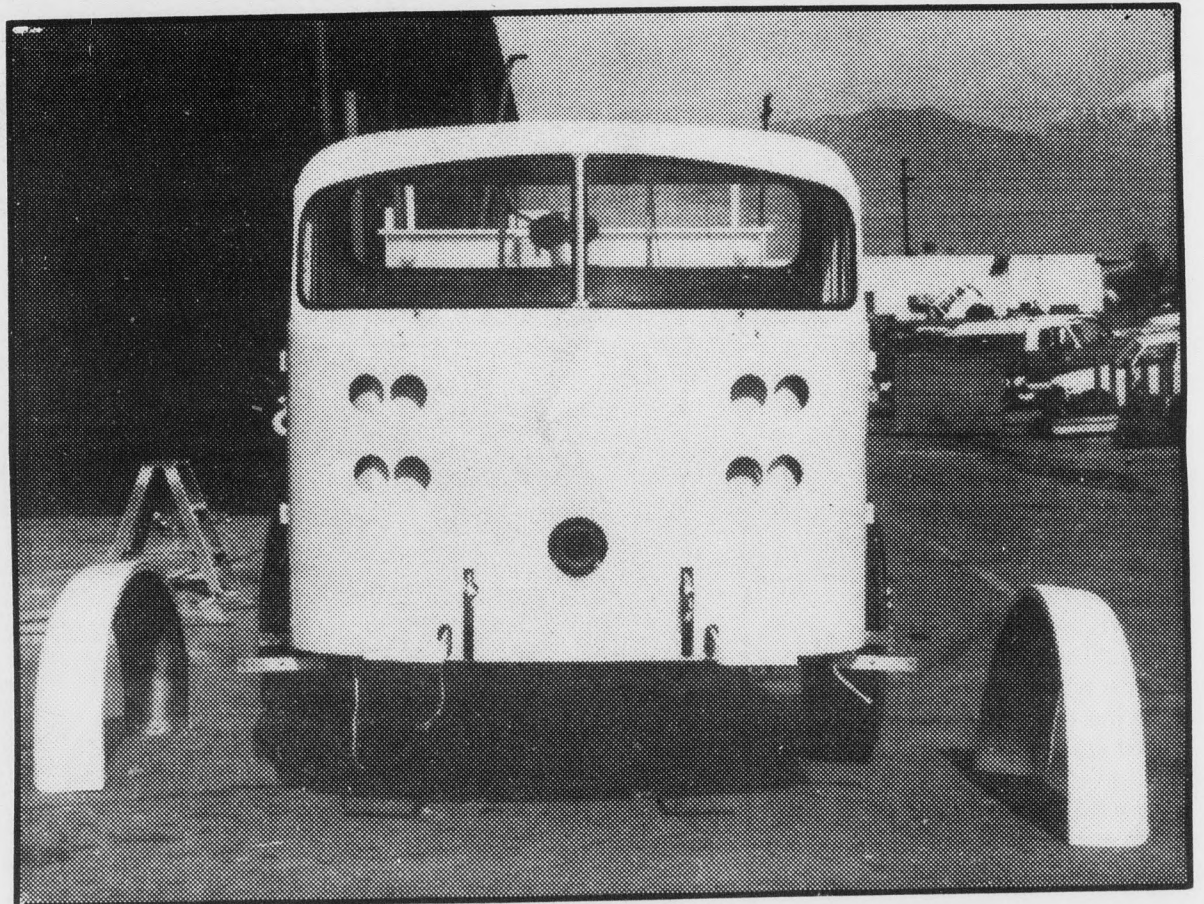

"We're trying to keep safety and practicality in mind," he said.

So Dominick installed disc brakes on all four wheels.

"Disc brakes are designed so they'll stop, even if the brakes are destroyed," Dominick said. "And they last longer. We were replacing brakes every six to eight months. Now we'll have to do a brake job every two years."

With that concern for safety came a change in color for the truck.

"This rig had been red," Dominick said. "We've never been afraid of changing tradition, so we went with white over red.

"White is a very visible color," he added.

To make viewing better, Dominick installed new windshields and rubber moulding around them.

Dominick, who joined Foothill as a mechanic in 1979 after finding he was too short to qualify as a firefighter, is obviously proud of "his" revamped machine.

"There's a pride that comes with knowing you've got something to do with these trucks going down the road," he said.

What was once a battered, old red fire truck has been transformed into a sparkling, new white-with-blue-trim machine.

"We consider it a brand new machine," he said. "We believe we'll get another 10 good years of front line work out of it."

During those 10 years, he hopes to establish a full-service bay at one of Foothill's stations and, perhaps, hire another mechanic.

And then, there are always more trucks to tear apart and rebuild.

Foothill Freeway extension design bids open

By Don Green

Perhaps a dozen teams of engineering, environmental and other firms will seek a contract of up to $1 million to design the Foothill Freeway extension.

Wes McDaniel, executive director of San Bernardino Associated Governments (SANBAG), estimated that 10 or 12 sets of qualifications may reach his office by next Monday's deadline.

The firms appear to be following a time-honored tradition of waiting until the very last before submitting their qualifications for the project, he said. At the beginning of this week, no qualification statements had reached SANBAG.

However, the companies' interest was evident last week when about 75 people listened to the objectives of the Route 30 Corridor Group and the state Department of Transportation (Caltrans) for selecting consultants and drafting the environmental impact study (EIS).

They asked a few questions and picked up copies of two previous studies of the freeway extension, more than 28 miles from La Verne to San Bernardino.

approval from the Board of Supervisors."

Kroutil was unable to give a date on which the report would go to the council.

Last December, the council started talking about putting out feelers on what the county's reaction would be toward an annexation attempt and agreed to develop an annexation plan.

The City Council March 5 directed the staff to pursue annexation of lands in the city's northern sphere of influence.

About 7,500-8,000 acres, or 12 square miles, are in the city's sphere of influence, as defined by LAFC, Kroutil said.

A preliminary report on plans for a controversial rock-crushing operation just north of the Victoria Planned Community in Etiwanda, which is inside the area targeted for annexation, will be available for public inspection April 21, according to the county Department of Land Management.

The draft environmental impact report on the project, released in January, showed the quarry would have "unavoidable impacts" on the area's traffic, air quality, land use planning and biology.

The project is proposed by the Fourth Street Rock Crushers of San Bernardino.

"I thought seven figures might get a few people here," said Rancho Cucamonga Councilman Jon Mikels, referring to money available for the EIS.

Mikels, chairman of the Route 30 Corridor Group, called the meeting a "milestone" in the years that freeway supporters have worked toward construction of the long-delayed route.

Requests for qualifications were mailed to some 200 firms, said Kerry Forsythe, assistant director of San Bernardino Associated Governments (SANBAG).

The corridor group is scheduled to select the finalists on April 30. These firms, or teams of firms, would then respond in more detail to a request for proposals, spelling out how they go about preparing the EIS for the freeway extension and its alternatives.

McDaniel and Caltrans

officials stressed to the firms that they would not be starting from scratch.

In addition to the two previous studies, Caltrans will supply extensive data forecasting traffic in the region through the year 2010. Lew Bedolla, chief of transportation analysis for Caltrans District 7 in Los Angeles, said the data will be complete by December.

Henry Lewandowski, an engineer with Caltrans District 8 in San Bernardino, pointed out that the route alignment from La Verne to the Devore Freeway at the Rancho Cucamonga-Fontana border is "pretty well locked in."

He added, "Most of the interchanges have been designed pretty well geometrically."

Lewandowski later explained that Caltrans has pinpointed the center line of the route for its entire stretch. This is the Park water garden is given approval

The concept of a water conservation garden to be located in Mallows Park has been approved by the Claremont City Council.

However, since the project has been expanded since the idea was first proposed, the council requested that garden plans be included in the 1986-87 city budget for review.

The staff recommended that the landscape architect, Cal Poly Pomona student Scott Seevers, be retained to complete the plans. The council approved up to $3,000 for Seevers to complete the plans.

Muriel O'Brien, a member of the Resources Management Committee, presented the plans to the council. The committee, which also includes Jere French and John Dourley, has worked with Thomas Holland, director of community services, to create an area in which families could identify plants which thrive well with little water.

The site chosen, Mallows Park, is the city's oldest park, See WATER/Page 22

freeway's horizontal alignment. As for the vertical alignment, he noted Upland and Rancho Cucamonga officials have long voiced a strong preference for a depressed, or below-grade, freeway through their cities.

However, he said the vertical alignment from the Devore Freeway to San Bernardino is still an open question.

McDaniel said the eastern stretch of the route could be anything from a major arterial street to a full freeway, depending on the findings in the EIS.

"I don't mean to imply, for the record, that the deal is done on the western portion from (Interstate) 15 to 210, but I would be less than candid that if I didn't acknowledge that in virtually everyone's mind — barring some finding in the study that precludes this — everybody is simply feeling that a full freeway in that portion is what's probably called for," he said.

Because much of the work has been done — McDaniel said the route has been designed to "virtually the 90th percentile" in Upland and Rancho Cucamonga — the corridor group wants the EIS to include recommendations for major arterial streets along the route.

McDaniel said the arterials — both parallel to the route and north-south streets between the Foothill and San Bernardino freeways — were added in part to make sure the local governments get their money's worth out of the $1 million available.

"The engineers and elected officials along the route are interested in getting this additional insight into the whole network. So, you can look for that to also be a significant factor."

Because relatively few firms have expertise to prepare the report on how to finance construction, McDaniel advised the companies present not to worry if the financial element is missing from their initial proposed teams of consultants.

The same financial consultant may be named in more than one proposal, and the corridor group may ultimately help arrange a "shotgun marriage" in choosing this consultant, he said.

Firms that prepared freeway reports, much smaller in scope than an EIS, in 1980 and 1984 are seeking selection for the EIS. But McDaniel assured the audience that the selection would be unbiased, with past work neither counting against nor giving an edge.

'Official Story' sheds light on Argentina

By David Elliott
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — The best scene in "The Official Story" comes fairly early, when the placidly comfortable Argentine housewife Alicia welcomes her old childhood pal Ana back from seven years abroad. The women sit close together on the sofa — while Alicia's husband Roberto listens anxiously from another room — and sip eggnog, laughing gaily, warmly flirting with old feelings.

Then Ana, pushed by Alicia, starts to explain why she left Argentina. There was a sudden abduction. A hidden room with a cold, bare table. Torture. Rape. And then exile. Ana's stiff anger crumbles into tears and Alicia is stabbed by terrible emotions of compassion, guilt, fear and empathy. She hugs Ana with a maternal fervency.

Motherly feeling and female

comradeship deepen the politics of "The Official Story," which won the Oscar as last year's best foreign film. Alicia (Norma Aleandro), has an adopted daughter, Gaby (the darling Analía Castro). Roberto (Hector Alterio) brought Gaby home when Alicia despaired over their not producing a child — he didn't tell her that he bought Gaby, the infant child of a young "subversive" couple abducted and murdered by right-wing terrorists, by using his connections with the military regime.

Alicia teaches history at a boys' school. She tells her students "No people can survive without memories" (a message soon echoed, too obviously, by little Gaby in her bath singing "In the land of I-don't-remember..."). Argentina's recent history, a lava flow that has not yet cooled into a safe past, is a void to Alicia; she prefers the "official story" of textbooks, full of old heroes and distanced cries for freedom. But she has brains and a conscience, and she wakes up.

Roberto, who loves Gaby no less than Alicia does (and more, we feel, than he loves Alicia), refuses to talk about the adoption. He has business deals going with those still in power, and he wants his family to be an anesthetic haven from the horrors in which he is implicated. But Alicia has been stunned by Ana (Chunchuna Villafrane) and on the streets she sees the marching mothers and grandmothers of the "desaparecidos" (the missing ones) who have vanished by the thousands into the night.

Set during the time of despair after Argentina had lost the Falklands war but the tainted, torturing military still grasped the wreckage of power, "Official Story" stars a national heroine. In 1976, Aleandro fled into exile in Europe. She received death threats upon her return in 1981, and even after the generals had fallen. But she doesn't play Alicia as a vessel of righteousness — the splendor of her performance is in the shadings, the refusal to settle for stark primary colors.

In the film, she is no beauty, but she has immense authority of decency, and her face is a great instrument of expression. Her best scenes are with the other women, not only Villafrane but the rendingly fine Chela Ruiz as Sara, an old lady who believes Gaby is her lost granddaughter. These women have an epic intensity of endurance and emotional candor; the film could almost be a South American "Trojan Women."

It must mean a great deal to Argentines. Director Luis Puenzo (who scripted with Aida Bortnik) packs in as much history as the simple plot can bear, and then a little more. An outdoor supper scene with Roberto's family is wonderfully played, yet so obviously a mini-lesson in Argentine history that it is almost Cliff's Notes (with an "anarchist" grandfather who may be the closest that Puenzo cares to touch the Peronist movement, a living fossil that is still too hot to handle).

The film is a bit demagogic in its frequent lingering over the little girl, and Atilio Stampone's music is the kind that elbows feelings, or softens a hard scene with a soft, tango-touched melody. But holding "The Official Story" accountable to high criteria of art may be unfair. It is still half-immersed in the history it relates, and that's what makes it a living sensation.

Though Aleandro has been sweeping the honors, deservedly, the toughest work in the film is by Hector Alterio as Roberto. He plays a man who has betrayed his father's ideals, yet for reasons not merely ignoble. And he has to show impassioned love while gradually dying inside from the poison of his guilty self-deception. Alterio (also a former exile) is wonderful.

YOUR SOCIAL SECURITY

Q. I am a native-born U.S. citizen and have worked all my life in the United States. I will be age 65 next October and currently am receiving Social Security benefits.

My wife, who is a Mexican citizen and lives in Mexico, will be 62 next November. Can she draw a check in Mexico? — F.G.P.

A. While out of the country, your wife must meet a special residency requirement to receive benefits as a spouse. Because she is not a U.S. citizen, she must have lived in the United States for at least five years.

Contact your local Social Security office for additional information.

Q. I recall reading that the 1983 amendments would do much to help Social Security's financial situation. Did they help? — M.L.

A. The 1983 legislation provided for reducing future growth in expenditures and increasing revenues, setting in place the basis for restoring the financial soundness of the trust funds.

The 1987 budget reflects continued improvement in the financial position of the Old Age Survivors and Disability Insurance Trust Funds. The improved status of the trust funds is reflected in the full repayment of outstanding interfund loan balances in 1986.

Q. My husband's employer is transferring him to one of their foreign offices overseas. Will he still be covered by Social Security? — A.C.

A. Work performed outside the United States by American citizens and resident aliens who are employed by an American employer is covered by Social Security.

Q. I was married to my ex-husband for 22 years. He has remarried; however, I did not remarry.

I am now 58 years old. I have had several surgeries and am unable to work. Could I receive any Social Security on my ex-husband's record? — C.K.

A. You can receive benefits when your ex-husband becomes eligible for retirement or disability benefits and you are 62.

In the event of his death, disabled widow's benefits may be payable. Disabled widow's benefits can be paid as early as age 50.

R.C. mayor wants city growth to slow down

By Marianne Aiken

Growth needs to slow down in Rancho Cucamonga, and revising density levels in the general plan is one way to do it, said Mayor Jeff King.

Getting a handle on land use, housing and traffic circulation in the growing city will be the aim of the upcoming 5-year general plan review, with a primary focus on "down-scaling residential development occurring in the community," King said.

"We're moving too fast," King told the council last Wednesday. "I think we need to pull the reins in a little bit so we can continue on an even keel without having everything crunch down upon us."

King said the city's residential growth could be slowed by lowering density ranges.

"If densities are modified, that in itself will slow it down," King said. "I think we all know the scale relates to the pace."

Council members mentioned the density range of 14-24 dwelling units per acre and the 24-and-over dwelling units per acre density range as primary concerns.

The general plan was adopted 3½ years after the city's 1977 incorporation, and encompasses the elements of land use, circulation, housing, public facilities, community design, highways, conservation, open space, energy conservation, safety and noise.

King said the city's

Ambulance services increase in Chino

By Dawn Webber

Chino residents will begin paying almost 8 percent more for ambulance services this month, after the City Council approved a resolution to implement maximum rates.

Trans-Medical Inc., the primary provider of ambulance service within Chino, requested a rate hike last October. Ambulance rates in the city have not been increased since September 1983.

The adopted resolution in effect sets ambulance rates within Chino equal to those charged in surrounding unincorporated county areas and Ontario.

Under the new rate, it will cost residents about $201.14 for emergency ambulance service for one person to a hospital located five miles away. Before this month's hike, residents would have paid $186.50 for similar service — or 7.85 percent less.

The cost of non-emergency ambulance services, which are pre-scheduled, now will be available at a reduced cost.

Homer L. Aerts, director for Trans-Medical Inc. of Fontana, explained in a letter, dated last October, the increase is necessary for his firm "to remain competitive."

Noting that Trans-Medical was losing paramedics to city fire departments, Aerts wrote: "We now are in the middle of a labor crisis that requires immediate action on our part, if we are to remain a provider of paramedic services."

"To remain competitive, it is now necessary to work our personnel no more than 10 20-hour shifts per month at the wages now earned for 13 days per month."

The reduction in work days requires the hiring of additional personnel, he added.

Although the approved resolution indexes Chino's rates to rates outlined in a San Bernardino County resolution, the legislation will not force the City Council to change its rates, if those of the county change.

Council members approved the rate hike 4-0. Councilman William Jahn was absent.

Any future rate changes will require another action by the council, said Richard Rowe, city manager.

In other action, the council, seated as the city's Redevelopment Agency, approved a $45,300 contract with Hunsaker & Associates Inc. for engineering work required for the 41-acre shopping center planned at Philadelphia and Benson avenues.

The engineering work is necessary for certain off-site improvements which the Redevelopment Agency is required to provide at the center.

Ray Wellington, public works director, said the shopping center's developer, Alexander Haagen Development Co., is responsible for providing street improvements out to the center line of all streets abutting the project.

The agency will pay to improve the remaining half of the streets — and to save money and time — will contract with the same engineering firm.

Street improvements to be performed in connection with the shopping center include:

- Widening of Philadelphia Street and Central and Benson avenues.

- A cul-de-sac on Vernon Avenue at approximately 700 feet north of Philadelphia.

- Widening of the Central Avenue off-ramps of the Pomona Freeway.

- Upgrading of traffic signals at Philadelphia Street, Central Avenue and at both on- and off-ramps of the Pomona Freeway.

Council members also approved scheduling of a "toxics roundup" in Chino April 19.

The one-day event, sponsored by San Bernardino County, will allow residents to bring their household hazardous wastes for disposal to the city service yard at 5050 Schaefer Ave.

Penelope Lawson, assistant city manager, reported to the council that county officials would like to permanently establish a Household Hazardous Waste Collection Center near a fire station in Chino or the Chino Hills.

County officials may bring a proposal before council members in the future, she added.

development should be gauged partially by the development of the Foothill Freeway.

"A lot of the development is vitally dependent on the Foothill Freeway, and we may never see Rancho Cucamonga develop to its fullest in our lifetime," King said.

Councilman Jon Mikels said a pre-bidding conference on the environmental impact report (EIR) for the Foothill Freeway was held March 31 by the San Bernardino Associated Governments (SANBAG), Caltrans and the Route 30 Corridor group, with about 75 consultants present.

"We're going to do a request for qualifications first. That list will be narrowed down to list of 5-6 who will receive requests for proposals," Mikels said. "The EIR, including full engineering, and full environmental clearing) will cost about $1 million."

Mikels is chairman of the Route 30 corridor group.

These homing bees carried messages in 1880s

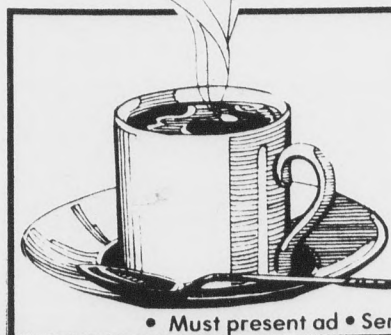

Message-carrying pigeons, sure, but bees? Yes, bees. During the late 1800s two beekeepers in France established a bee post line to send messages.

First they exchanged some bees. Then they fed them a dish of honey and, while the insects were eating, the keepers would stick to them bits of cigarette paper with coded messages.

Then the bees were released, flew home and the messages came off as the insects crawled through the narrow hole of their hive.

STITCHING WITCHERY

Found: Innovative use for old socks

By Betty W. Kinser
Copley News Service

Dear Betty: I came up with an idea that I would like to share with other people who sew.

I use the bands of old socks to replace the worn-out feet of children's blanket sleepers (the first part of the pajamas to wear out).

It is very simple to do: Cut the bands off a pair of socks (any kind with at least 3 inches or more of band). I use my husband's tube socks.

Cut old feet off pajamas so that front and back measure the same. Place right side of band to right side of pajamas, having raw edges even. Sew band to leg, stretching band to fit. Sew in 1/4-inch straight stitch and finish with zigzag.

This gives new life to these pajamas, saves money in replacement, and also gives more growing room. — N. Nugent, North Tonawanda, N.Y.

Nifty idea!
May I add one word of caution? If your toddler is walking, these "sock feet" can be slick. There is a non-skid sole product available for stitching to the bottom of pajama feet.

Dear Betty: I have a favorite pattern that is 20 years old. It has seen so much use I could hardly handle it any longer. Tried making another from Pellon, tissue, newspaper — you name it. But nothing worked.

I don't know if other sewers have tried this, but it works beautifully: I iron my old patterns onto a super-sheer fusible interfacing. Not too hot an iron at first. Carefully start at center, moving out. Cut out the pattern. Then, with a hotter (wool) setting, iron well all over, being sure it's all fused together.

All markings are still there. Pins go in and out easily. Try it. You'll like it! — Evelyn Alexander, Venice, Fla.

A good idea worth repeating, Evelyn. Thank you for sharing.

An added note: Do not move iron back and forth as you fuse. Lift it, lower it, lift it, lower it, to prevent "warping" the pattern.

Questions may be addressed to Betty Kinser, 12319 Charlotte, Kansas City, MO 64146.

dedicated in 1926 as a lawn bowling center. It is located at the intersection of Harrison Avenue and Indian Hill Boulevard, where the Village and Historic Claremont merge.

The park includes a tennis court. The plans as submitted to the council retain a tennis court on the east side of the park. At the meeting, there was some consideration of eventually using the court as off-street parking for about six cars, should the necessity arise.

The design presented to the council features a central arbor area with casual seating.

Councilman Bill McCready said, "I see a change in concept from a $20,000 drought-tolerant demonstration garden to a $128,000 centerpiece garden — a major capital project. This needs to be looked at in relation to all other capital projects in the city."

Councilwoman Judy Wright expressed concern about parking and wondered if the tennis courts might eventually be needed to provide additional space.

The project was allocated $15,000 in the current budget, more than adequate for the plans, O'Brien noted. She recommended that the garden be developed over several years and that contributions from the community be encouraged.

Councilman Gordon Curtis questioned whether plans for the garden should be coordinated with the Village Plan now being completed.

Mayor Enid Douglass noted that the garden plans had been scheduled before the council several times in the past weeks, but were deferred because of immediate pressing business.

Children will to be sought via MIA-type bracelets

By Brandon Griggs

Remember those bracelets, popular during the Vietnam War, which were imprinted with the name of a American soldier who was missing in action?

Now, thanks in part to a fledgling Rancho Cucamonga-based organization, a similar bracelet may be coming back into style — this time, bearing the name and photograph of a missing child.

"There was an awful lot of awareness due to the MIA bracelets ... that's what we're trying to do with this," said Jerry McGarvey, founder and president of Kids Missing in America (KMIA), which produces the new copper bracelets.

Like the MIA bracelets, the new bracelets will be distributed nationwide. They come in two sizes and cost $10 — and all proceeds, except for processing costs, will benefit the National Child Safety Council.

Each bracelet lists the name, date of birth, and hometown of the missing child, along with height, weight, hair and eye color. Unlike the MIA bracelets, the new bracelets bear a stamp-size photo of the child.

As McGarvey was interviewed last week at the organization's new three-room offices on Arrow Highway, KMIA staffers unloaded cardboard boxes full of bracelets.

"Our ultimate goal is to produce 10,000 bracelets per child, distributed throughout the United States so the child's picture will be in every state," he added.

"We feel if we can put these kids' pictures all over the United States, we'll have a much better chance (of locating them)."

As of last Thursday, about 20,000 bracelets had been printed at a plant in Ontario, McGarvey said. So far, six missing children are represented on bracelets, including Laura Bradbury, the Huntington Beach girl who disappeared while camping with her family.

The other five children — from New York, Pennsylvania, Washington, and Wisconsin — were selected at random. "Choosing six kids was tough," McGarvey said. Eventually, KMIA hopes to print bracelets with the names and photos of thousands of missing children, he said.

The idea for the bracelets was hatched last summer when McGarvey was in San Bernardino visiting his sister-in-law, whose husband was killed in Vietnam. They were talking about the war and MIAs when McGarvey noticed a milk carton with a missing child's picture on it.

"It clicked," he said, and the next day McGarvey was on the phone to the National Child Safety Council. A San Bernardino resident, McGarvey quit his 15-year job as manager of a finance corporation to head KMIA.

McGarvey hopes to raise enough money through the sale of the bracelets to allow the NCSC to distribute directories of missing children to every police agency, probation department, school, and social services department in the country.

"We're trying to put a directory in every place we can, so that it may actually deter a child abductor because he knows the kid's picture will be plastered all over the United States."

The bracelets, which went on sale last week, are available at KMIA's Rancho Cucamonga office (989-8228) or by sending a check for $10 to KMIA, P.O. Box 144, Alta Loma 91701.

Jerry McGarvey, founder of the Rancho Cucamonga-based Kids Missing in America, models a bracelet with a photo of Rima Traxler, a missing Washington girl. The copper bracelets, which cost $10 and each feature one of six different missing children, went on sale last week to benefit the National Child Safety Council.

Chaffey College swimmer Susie Keough has qualified for next month's state meet in the 50 and 100 yard breaststroke.

CC swimmers qualify for state meet

Chaffey College's swim team will host a pair of dual meets that will go a long way in determining the Inland Valley Conference championship.

Coach Mike Dickson's squad will be home to Rio Hondo Friday and then host Palomar College April 18 in the IVC showdown. Both schools have undefeated men's teams.

"We'll use the dual with Palomar to get good seeds for the IVC finals," Dickson said the of the meet scheduled ffor April 24-26 at East Los Angeles

College. "We'll use the finals to get our main state qualifying times."

Chaffey finished third in last year's state meet and has already qualified five men for the state meet. The Panthers were fourth in national competition.

Chaffey swimmers who have qualified for the May 1-3 at La Jolla include Tjatur Suriarto, Chris Magee, Daniel Budiman, Mustamiskin and Subeni Sudiono.

Alexander Gallardo

Tjatur Suriarto, Chaffey record holder in two breaststroke events, has qualified for the state meet in three events.

Boat race reset at reservoir

David Robinson of Upland will be back in action this week at Puddingston Reservoir for the re-scheduled In-n-Out Burgers Springnationals sanctioned by the International Hot Boat Association.

Robinson was the top qualifier in competition flatbottom last week, hitting a top speed of 134.73 at the San Dimas lake. The finals were postponed by debris washed into the water by the rain.

Also competing will be Willy Thomas of Rancho Cucamonga, who qualified third in blown alcohol flatbottom.

According to race IHBA officials, the field of 150 boats will qualify Saturday. Final eliminations are scheduled for Sunday beginning at 9 a.m.

IHBA competition features 16 classes, from the quick Top Fuel Hydros to the stock boats.

Cage tourney

Chaffey College will host a Three-on-Three Basketball Tournament on April 26 to raise funds for the Panther men's basketball program.

There will be two divisions (Large and Small), both double-elimination, for the one-day tournament co-sponsored by Chick's Sporting Goods. Check-in is slated for 7:30 a.m., with the first contest set to start at 8 a.m.

Registration deadline is April 14, with a fee of $30 per-team. All money will go to the Chaffey men's basketball program. All players will receive tournament t-shirts, with special prizes to division winners.

For additional information, contact 987-1731, ext. 441 during business hours.

Cal Blast

The Cal Blast will play Aguelitas of East Los Angeles for the State Cup title for boys under-13 Saturday at Cal Poly Pomona.

Casey Lang scored four goals to tie a scoring record as he paced the Blast to a 7-1 win over the Manhattan Beach Hurricanes in the semifinals. Chad Matz added a pair of goals and Chris Fuji wrapped up the scoring.

Lang has now scored 103 goals this season, tying the state mark set by the Blast's Eric Chaisongkram last season.

Terry Shorter, Aaron Edwards, Justin Davis, Mark Palos, Marc Yerkey and Jessie Vargas will each be making their third appearance in the State Cup finals, this year against the Coast League champions.
